Preface

This book has been written in 7 years to help both Persian and English language learners to improve their understanding of Persian and English expressions and phrases. For the expressions and phrases of these two languages, different equivalents have been offered as far as possible and I hope language learners would enjoy them and use them in their speaking and writing and later and of course after quite a lot of practice, hear and understand them in movies, conversations and books. I should point out two things. First, The pronunciation is written in Persian for beginners to use the book easily though it's not a correct way of writing phonetics. The correct way is to write the pronunciation using the International Phonetic Alphabet. Advanced students must ignore these Persian pronunciations and use their own dictionaries and check the phonetics if necessary. Second, this book is not categorized in specific words or topics or even alphabetically. The reason behind this is that in this book we have tried to have several Persian and English Equivalents of expressions near each other and we want the students to concentrate on them together. To categorize, we had to bring the same equivalents again and again and it would have made the book much more voluminous. Hence any kind of categorization was not possible. A language consists of two main parts of formal and informal words, phrases and expressions and these two parts themselves include many other types. The most important components of a language will be defined in the coming pages. Despite all efforts not to have any mistakes, they may exist and the writer will definitely be glad to receive your corrections via info@tootian.ir. Amir Mohamadi, 2016.
