Preface

Here's a universal truth, no one likes to be a wrongdoer, especially in front of others. One of the most catastrophic sorts of danger is obviously not having true knowledge.

Delusion of grandeur which is the result and product of mind disorderliness shows itself mostly in proud and conceited people.

Here there are four groups of people; knowledgeable people, unknowledgeable people, credulous people and delusional people .

The first group of people is those who talk after assurance, they are sometimes in doubts about what they really know.

The second group of people is those who are willing to confess what they don't know.

The third group is credulous people who believe rumors easily and resolve to be speakers .

The last group is delusional people who are headstrong, irrational, thirsty for power and leadership, interested in commanding and commenting, teaching and preaching.

In this book I have investigated the conception of delusion, reflections of delusion, feedbacks of that and other possible facets of this matter.
