This humble work would not have been achieved without the worthy help and support of a number of professors and academic staff in addition to other people outside the sphere of academe. Professor Hamdi Hameed Al-Douri (Ph.D) was the first and the most elemental guide for this work through three stages of help and encouragement. Firstly, he opened my eyes to the importance of the American literature while before that I had just naïve knowledge about that rich and significant part of the English literature.. Secondly, he was the person who suggested the title of the present work and helped in setting plan. Thirdly, he played a great and tireless role in guiding the process of writing it step-by-step.

A couple of academicians to whom the work is indebted are professors Dr. Alfred H. Saulniers, a retired Economist, Owner, The Orchard St Manor and Dr. Suzanne Smith Saulniers, Community Development Director from the United States of America. They, thankfully, provided me with twenty five excellent articles from the best American academic magazines in addition to two invaluable books about the African- American poet, Amiri Baraka.

Thanks to the poet, Amiri Baraka himself who answered my e-mail and directed me how to get access to the information I asked him for. I would like, also, to express my gratitude for my dear friends: Jabbar Raheem from Britain, Tahir Ali from Canada; and Umer Shareef from Kurdistan who helped greatly in providing me with important first-hand sources about the subject of the book. Ra'ad Mahmood and Wuria Sabir were also elemental in helping with further sources.

Lastly, my heartfelt thanks to my dear wife, Parween, for her patience, support and encouragement throughout the long process that started with the efforts exerted to get admittance as a candidate and ended with the painful writing and discussion of the present dissertation.
