About the Author

Nazanin Azardeg was born in Tehran, Iran, on 25 May 1989. She graduated from Azad University of Karaj with a Bachelor of Arts in English Translation. She is doing her MBA right now.

After receiving her education, Nazanin Azardeg entered to the golden world of teaching and she could find all her love in this job. She later worked as a translator, interpreter and foreign commercial manager in some projects of import and export. As a translator, she supervised the translators of Dorun application which teaches English through music (www.dorun.ir). At the moment, she is managing an international company to serve people with different visas of different countries.

Having worked in different international cases and known the weak points of English learners, she decided to write a book to help people facilitate their communication. She chose movies as there are real conversations in movies dealing with English Native lives.

She is going to make a series of this book with different topics, in case of being successful in making this book popular and realizing her goals to teach English in a real context.

Introduction

We are living in a video age – and so are our students. In 2014, 300 hours of video content was uploaded to YouTube every minute. Video has become as widely accepted as the optimum medium for getting information, that no one can deny the great role of movies in language learning.

This book promotes the innovative and creative use of films in English language teaching and learning. All the conversations in the book revolve around real contexts taken from the three movies worked on in this book.
