Introduction

Being intellectual is very ordeal, it's tremendously different from being intelligent. Both "intelligent" and "intellectual" describe distinctive mental capacity. However, "Intelligent" often suggests a natural quickness of understanding (an intelligent reader). "Intellectual" implies having not only a high degree of understanding, but also a capacity and taste for the higher forms of knowledge (intellectual interests).

The Interests usually are in society and political issues, intellectuals have a bright mind. They can understand a human with all their senses. They are, so to speak, great psychologists.

I wouldn't beat around the bush any more, let's get the crucial point: The books which can make you an intellectual. These books should be read by all young generations, for they represent humanity and different conditions in life. The books help them open their mind and have a new point of view. They can teach us life Much More than the life itself can.

In this book the author is supposed to evaluate some literary works which reading can expand your mind. These books cause some kind of intellectualism in people.

The general course of this project would be like this:

- 1) Intellectualism is explained.

2)The books which mostly have philosophical and psychological themes are summarized.(These books are complicated;so you must think from the bottome of your entity to realize them).

3)The books are criticized,complex points are clarified and some study guides are available.

4)Major characters are introduced,each one with their portrayals.

5)The covers of each book are inserted.
